Sushma Jain

Sushma Jain's riveting canvasses, rendered in oil paint, offer rare glimpses of nature and its creatures in their natural habitat.

What is it about her paintings of animals that make us want to repeatedly look at them? The secret is easily revealed: she makes them in our human mould. On her canvasses, animals like tigers, camels and polar bears spring to life as loners, lovers and figurines of inspiration. There is a panoply of emotions and also a quietude. She captures the joy of the animal immersed in its surrounding, a place where it has no fear: it is safe.

In all her artwork, Jain manages to highlight every conceivable detail of the subject with expert strokes of her brush. Extensive detailing with regards to anatomical features characterise majority of the works. Eyes are an important element when painting in a realistic style. In every portrait, she makes sure that they have a lifelike glint and reflection thereby making them appear convincingly alive.

The end result is magical: we repeatedly want to gaze at them.

Her mix of colors, the foreground so distinct from the background creates compelling imagery. The memory of the original encounter is etched in every detail creating immaculate engravings of chronicles. It reminds us of the life that lies beyond our daily troubles and struggles; a life that epitomizes great triumph and magnificence.
